ABSTRACT

NUR FITRI DWI HANA. 105961104420. Gender Mainstreaming in Coffee Farmer Institutions in Tompobulu Subdistrict, Bantaeng District. Advised by SYAFIUDDIN and ISNAM

The purpose of this study is to determine the access, control, participation, and benefits of female coffee farmers in coffee farmer institutions in Tompobulu Subdistrict, Bantaeng District.

This research is a qualitative research using a descriptive data analysis method with purposive sampling, using primary and secondary data types and sources, and data collection techniques through observation, interviews, and documentation. The number of informants studied was 6 people from: the Head of the Labbo Village Farmer Group, 2 members of the Labbo Village Farmer Group, the Head of the Pattaneteang Village Farmer Group, and 2 members of the Pattaneteang Village Farmer Group.

The results of the study show that the Farmer Groups in Labbo Village and Pattaneteang Village have not paid attention to gender equality (1) access: all members of the Labbo Village Farmer Group are dominated by men, while in Pattaneteang Village female farmers are still minimal and there is discrimination where information related to farmer group institutions is only given by relatives (2) participation: women's participation in land management in Labbo Village exists but is not registered as members of the Labbo Village Farmer Group, this is because of the idea that women have their own groups, for Pattaneteang Village women also participate but the number of members is very small (3) control: control in Labbo Village and in Pattaneteang Village is each controlled by men (4) benefits: the benefits of coffee farmers in Labbo Village and Pattaneteang Village are very different, this is because of the direct understanding of knowledge obtained by female farmers in Pattaneteang Village when there are extension activities, while for female farmers in Labbo Village there are none.
